Seakeeper adds global service manager

California-based gyroscopic stabilization system manufacturer Seakeeper appointed Kevin Zervas as global service manager. Seakeeper Chief Operations Officer John Kermet made the announcement.

Zervas has 20 years of marine industry experience in management and service positions, according to a Seakeeper news release. For Seakeeper, he will oversee a global team of technicians, continue to enhance service training programs and expand the company's superior customer support via key partners, distributors and dealers.

"Seakeeper offers an outstanding product, and has an excellent culture of collaboration among its engineering, sales and service groups. This is vital to ensuring we deliver the best product and experience for our customers. The company has already seen tremendous growth, and there's a great sense of excitement about the future," Zervas said in the release.

"Kevin has worked for young, quickly growing companies before, which is an asset to his position at Seakeeper," Kermet said in the release. "His expertise complements our team's skills well as we plan our next expansion phase."
